Adventures in the West: Stories for Young Readers

Edited by Susanne George Bloomfield and Eric Melvin Reed

Before MP3 players, DVDs, and video games, before even TV and radio, American children entertained themselves by reading. Often what they read were popular magazines aimed at the whole family; a weekly newspaper such as The Youth's Companion or a monthly magazine like St. Nicholas were about all a turn-of-the-century family could afford. But what these publications offered was invaluable, and it is this education in imagination and American life that Adventures in the West revisits.
